STRONG POINTS

Hyde is a strong and physical runner with great size for a NFL RB. With his size and strength it is my belief that he can be competitive for a lot of carries if given the opportunity. He is a very durable back which at times is surprising. His feet never stop moving, he is always looking for the extra yard which makes him a great asset. Running hard and playing hard every down, along with having great hands out the backfield also adds to his value. Most importantly, his ability to pass block is why I am highly impressed with him and predict him coming off the board early on day 2.

SUMMARY

With Hyde being a senior, his intelligence and understanding of the game are key for his success. He is not the fastest back in the draft, but I think over the last few weeks he has proven he can be an every down back in the NFL. His awareness and vision is what I am most impressed with and his being able to get to the second level from the inside and outside and attacking defenders who are in his way is a huge asset. The beginning of his senior year did not start off very well and he is showing it's not how you start but how you finish. That in itself tells me that he knows when to take advantage of his opportunities, towards the end of the year is when a back must be reliable and consistent especially when the weather changes. Very excited to see how he pans out at the combine, I look for big things from Hyde coming into the NFL next season.

WEAKNESSES

Break-a-way speed is a concern but he has the capability with a full head of steam as I witnessed in the listed games viewed. The question is can he perform on the NFL level? If given the chance at the second level, can he execute? C.O.D. is questionable along with his balance, but I believe those are challenges that can be worked on in the off-season.
